The Battle of Westport pitted Confederate General Sterling Price against Union forces. The battle, known as Action Before Westport, 1864, took place on October 21, 22, and 23, 1864, and was part of a Confederate raid led by Price. The battle was the largest engagement west of the Mississippi.

Howard N. Monnett, author of the book Action Before Westport, 1864, has written extensively on the battle. His work has been published in various books and articles, including "Howard Monnett, widely considered the Action Before Westport, 1864 - Howard N. Monnett - Google Books".

The battle began with a Confederate raid into Missouri, and Price's forces encountered Union troops at Westport. The battle resulted in significant losses for both sides, with the Union forces retreating.

Monnett's work has been recognized for its detailed and accurate depiction of the battle, which was pivotal in the history of the American Civil War.
