Pioneers in Justice: Building Networks and Movements for Social Change is a new case study by Heather McLeod Grant about the Levi Strauss Foundation's work in the field of social justice. This study is part of the Pioneers in Justice series, which aims to document the strategies and experiences of organizations working to build networks and movements for social change. The study focuses on the Levi Strauss Foundation's efforts to support organizations working on a range of issues, including economic justice, environmental justice, and human rights. The study highlights the importance of building partnerships and networks to achieve social change, and identifies key lessons for other organizations working in this field. Overall, the study provides valuable insights for anyone interested in social justice and the role of philanthropy in promoting change.
