The story originated in Christian literature of the Middle Ages, specifically in the work of Giovanni Boccaccio, who derived the story from a French source. Petrarch translated Boccaccio's "Tales of Griselda" into Italian, and Chaucer translated Petrarch's work into English. The Griselda story is a narrative related by three of the greatest writers of the Middle Ages: Boccaccio, Petrarch, and Chaucer. The Griselda story is a tale of domestic violence and women's endurance, and it has been a subject of scholarly interest for centuries.
