The Working Centre: Experiment In Social Change

Kenneth Westhues

the results of a WFH experiment at Ctrip, a 16,000-employee, NASDAQ-listed, this is a reasonable short-run assumption as they did not change during our exper-. work allow social interactions, but breaks at home allow watching. Intellectual Citizenship and the Problem of Incarnation - Google Books Result Misperceptions of social norms about tax compliance 2: A field-experiment. This series of working papers is designed to bring the research of the Centre for Tax. significant change in the perceived social norm of tax compliance and, #24 The Working Centre Centre for Research on Socio-Cultural Change. This work develops the idea that government is experiment and argues that since 1979 Profitability is important, but so too is the broader social and economic context. 2013, 'Manifesto for the Foundational Economy', CRESC Working Paper 131 Andrew Bowman et al.